

GAYNOR DESIRES FISTIC COMBAT

He Would Like to Try His Fists
on Some Newspaper Owners.

TALKS OF "DIRTY PENS."

Tells Oneida Society. He Still Has Good Fight Left in Him.

New York, January 29.—There are three "fellows" here that "own nasty newspapers" whom Mayor Gaynor would like to lick in the old schoolboy fashion, at least he expressed this desire while yielding the gavel as toastmaster at the annual dinner of the Society of the Sons of Oneida.

In Parkhurst got his in a way, too, says the Mayor, after mentioning the names of the families of Oneida County, and that it was only due to the Parkhurst family of that section to say that they were in no way related to "Rabbi" Parkhurst, of New York, a friend of his.

Mayor Gaynor gave vent to his desire for fistic combat after he had related how he visited his home county not long ago and had found that an old acquaintance had been indicted after having an adversary who had done the same to him when he was a bit "high" after an excursion to Utica. The Mayor said he wrote to the district attorney pleading for leniency for his old friend, telling the prosecutor what the custom was up there when he was a boy, and remarking that in this light the man should be let out without punishment.

No Law Afterward.
The Mayor then went on to say that that was the custom when I lived up there. When we wanted a battle we said to the fellow, "Say, no law, and I will lick you," and if he was brave enough he said, "no law," and then we had it out, and we settled it right. There was no law afterward. I would like to have that custom down here, (laughter and applause).

If we had it here, there are three fellows down here (laughter and applause) that own nasty newspapers, and I would like to have it out with them on that basis. I don't want to boast, because I am growing old, but I really think I could do them up, too. (Applause). They may think they can do me up with their dirty pens, but I think I could do them up the other way.

I think I have said enough left in me, and it would not require much, either, to tell the truth.

The somewhat rare role of toastmaster seemed to be to the liking of Mayor Gaynor, who is president of the society. He looked upon the comparatively small number of members and the many guests who had been invited to the occasion, and falling into a reminiscent mood, talked of the early days of his youth in Oneida County. He said: "I am very happy indeed to greet you all. It is very seldom I get a chance to be toastmaster. I tell you that, (laughter). I generally have the other end of it. So I will try to be as good a toastmaster as I know how. From what I have seen of toastmasters since I have been Mayor I do not remember a single one to pattern after. (Laughter). As a rule you cannot get a word in edgewise with them. They say everything. No matter what your subject is, and no matter how well you have prepared it, they manage in some way to say it before you get a chance to say a word. I am not going to do that to-night. I am going to stick to my own business if I can. I have a hard time to do that, and some think I do not do it. And a few think I do. Of course I think the few are right."

The Mayor mentioned the streams and creeks in which he fished and the places, and told of Verona Springs, and how his father once went there and brought home a barrel of sulphur water, and that was to cure all members of the family of all the diseases they had and to prevent them from having others.

Got Well Without It.
The judge felt the water put in the field and it "came a voice from among the diners."

"You are quite right," said the Mayor, "my father put it out in the barn for the pike."

"What a feast did it have on the pig," somebody asked.

"Well, it smelled so bad there that the pigs could not stand it. So he took a barrel of sulphur water and he put it out in the middle of the field. Let a few pigs go on the farm, as far away from the house as we could get. We could not stand it even that far away, and I think we finally knocked the end of the barrel in and got rid of it. They were trying to make a watering place of Verona, and that was the result."

There were the Christies, and the Marrs, and the Sullins, and the Paynes, and the Parkhursts, and so on," he said. "Probably it is due to the Parkhurst family, if there be any of them here, that I should say that they were in no way related to Rabbi Parkhurst—Rabbi Parkhurst, of New York. He is a friend of mine."

Mrs. Brooke Eskridge arrived in Richmond yesterday evening and will remain until the 31st day. Before she returns to her country home in Buckingham county.

DR. SCOTT'S EMULSION

Fishing Banks Fail St. Pierre
Fleet, and It Will Be Reduced.

New York, January 29.—Fishermen on the Newfoundland Banks are discouraged by the results of the 1912, and the prospect for the coming season is so unimpressive that Consul John K. Baxter, at St. Pierre, believes that not more than twenty-five schooners will be fitted out from St. Pierre this year, compared with forty schooners in 1912.

The total catch of cod by the St. Pierre fleet last year was only 1,479,304, representing a loss, Mr. Baxter thinks, of not less than $1,500 to $2,000 a vessel. The prices were higher than usual, it was true, but not high enough to balance the small catch.

"Various causes are alleged in explanation of the decline of the St. Pierre fleet," Mr. Baxter says. "Four successive unprofitable seasons in 1909, 1910, and 1911, ruined many small owners and impaired the general resources of the colony; supplies are relatively expensive at St. Pierre and labor is scarce; crews must be brought out from France in the spring and returned at the close of the season, for the local fishermen prefer to work the inshore grounds independently in their own dories."

There were 37 dory fishermen at St. Pierre this season, working near the shore and coming in every night, an increase of seventy-seven over the number reported last year. They did well during the spring and early summer, but later on were hampered by a scarcity of squid and by the weather. The statistics of their catch of cod had not been compiled on November 25, but it is the general impression that the total catch was mediocre, 25,000 to 30,000 hundred-weight, the average price for 'green' shore cod (about $1.15) was high enough to give them reasonable returns.

Fishermen also caught 3,156 hogheads of caplin, which was sold for bait at prices ranging from $1 to $5 a hoghead.

"Of late years a number of steam trawlers have reinforced the metropolitan fleet of sailing vessels. The French first tried this method of fishing in Newfoundland waters in 1903 and 1904, with unsatisfactory results. No trawlers are mentioned in the official reports for 1905 and 1906. In 1907, four of these vessels resumed the experiment. In 1908, there were six, and their catch averaged 121 hundred-weight a day. This was so encouraging that thirty trawlers came out in 1909. The catch that year was poor, in fact, the thirty trawlers dropped to ten, and the catch was about half what it had been in the banner year, 1908. Partly owing to this, and partly because of the extraordinary abundance of fish in French waters, only seven trawlers came out in 1911.

"In 1912 there were fourteen French steam trawlers averaging 400 tons gross operating on the Banks. One of them was wrecked early in the season on the coast of Mingan, and the remainder of the remaining thirteen is not known, but they delivered at St. Pierre 32,888 'green' quintals. This would amount to an average of 3,065 hundred-weight per vessel, worth at current prices about $43,000. The official report is to be approximately $115 per quintal. If this is correct, one of these vessels, spending four months on the Banks and in transit, would cost $115,000. When it is considered that, in addition to the fish discharged at St. Pierre for transshipment, probably all of the trawlers carried back a cargo of fish to France, it can be safely assumed that they made a reasonable profit on the season.

"Practically all of the catch is now landed in France 'green'—that is, cleaned and salted—and is subsequently dried or otherwise prepared at Bordeaux. Bordeaux is the principal port of entry, and handles more than half of the total catch. Roughly speaking, one-half of the catch is consumed in France, for which it is exported in transit, and a duty of four and twenty-five hundredths cents (general per pound) is exported to French colonies, where it is also produced by import duties, and the remaining three-fifths is exported to foreign countries, principally Spain and Italy. Besides protecting native fishermen in the home and colonial markets the French Government has a bounty of $1.25 for each man shipped for the season in Newfoundland waters and encourages exports of dried cod to the colonies and to foreign countries by bounties of which the minimum rate is one and three-quarters cents per pound.

Sudden Use for License.
Baron Dornes Hears From Flanice by Phone and Loses No Time.

New York, January 29.—Baron Robert A. Dornes, of the French Embassy in Washington, was in his room yesterday morning with no intention of getting married. Nevertheless he found occasion to pull from his pocket a marriage license, issued April 11 last, in his own name, to Marie Fernandine von Hufelien of Geneva, Switzerland, his fiancée. Then the telephone rang.

John Green, the baron's partner, was not conscious that anything was happening until he heard the receiver put up with a bang and he held Dornes spring from his chair with great excitement.

"At last she has consented to marry me," he exclaimed.

"Where?" inquired Green.

"In three hours." It was half past 11.

"Where?"

"Ah, you shall see in due course."

So Baron Dornes and his partner hurried to the Hotel Brevoort, where both live, and had luncheon. Shortly afterward they were seated in a taxicab speeding downtown. At 7:30 o'clock they pulled up beneath the bridge of Sighs. At precisely the same instant a second taxi stopped at the same locality and from it alighted Miss Hufelien, accompanied by her sister Caroline.

A few exclamations were exchanged at the party went into the Criminal Courts Building and to the chambers where Justice Goff was presiding at a murder trial. Baron Dornes gave a note to one of the attendants and the four waited in the corridor.

A few seconds later Justice Goff halted the trial and retired to his private office, where he met the baron, his fiancée, and the two friends. The ceremony was quickly performed and the bridegroom hurried back to his office to keep a business appointment which he had made only a few minutes before his fiancée telephoned him. But as the bride went with him it was not so had New York for Boston, where they intend to remain for a few days.

This was the second marriage. It was said that Justice Goff has performed in his judicial career.

Goes to Mississippi.

Pulaski, January 29.—At a special meeting of the Abingdon Presbytery, held here today, Rev. S. B. McBride was dismissed from this Presbytery to the Mississippi Presbytery, he having accepted a call to a pastorate in that State. He has been pastor of the Hillsville and Galax Presbyterian Churches for several years.

BALLES EE BEATH IN OCEAN

Champion Swimmer Has Terrifying Experience, Which Nearly Ends Fatally.

Honolulu, H. T., January 29.—In a desperate battle with a giant eel ten feet below the surface of the ocean, "Duke" Kahanamoku, world's champion swimmer at short distances, had a narrow escape from death at his practice grounds near here to-day. He killed the eel and in doing so lost the index finger of his right hand.

As a result of his experience the winner of chief aquatic honors at the Olympic games last year may be unable to retain his swimming power.

Kahanamoku, known as the "Duke of Waikiki," a resort near Honolulu, has been practicing hard for participation in the Australian swimming championships, and with companions was going through the daily exercise in the water when to-day's misfortune came.

Kahanamoku's friends in the water did not notice his disappearance beneath the surface until cries from shore aroused them. Then they searched the surface with eager gaze for hundreds of yards about, and soon were diving in desperate efforts to locate the champion.

After the "Duke" had been under fully two minutes his companions noticed a furious churning of the water ten yards from them, where the depth is at least ten feet. Suddenly one of the swimmer's legs shot up from below, and was hooked about in the air, indicating that the youth was struggling desperately to release himself. While the other swimmers were dashing toward the spot with powerful overhand strokes the leg after one final kick was dragged clear beneath the surface near the churning of the water continued.

Just as the swimmers reached the scene Kahanamoku came to the surface, gasped for breath and then sank again. His friends dived, brought him up and dashed for the shore, where he was revived. One of the party got the body of the eel, which the "Duke" had choked to death. It was the largest ever seen in these waters.

Kahanamoku was in a very weak condition to-night. It is not known whether he will be able to compete in any of the spring or summer matches.

Sets World's Record in 100 Metre Swim.

"Duke" Kahanamoku has been known throughout the United States as a promising young swimmer for three years, and leaped into international fame last summer at the Olympic games in Stockholm, when he won the 100 metre swimming match. He is in his early twenties, and got his experience as a beach rider in Hawaii Islands. After the Olympic games he participated in the Hamburg races and there established the world's record on one minute, one and one-half seconds for the 100 metre distance.

On coming to this country he gave exhibitions in many cities. Only recently various athletic associations wanted to have him represent them at the coming Australian swimming races.

FAMILY QUARREL ENDS IN SON KILLING FATHER.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
Raleigh, N. C., January 29.—John L. Weather was shot and instantly killed this afternoon, in a quarrel with his son, by his son, Haywood Weather. The two quarrelled about some wood, the son ran up stairs, procured a revolver and came back with it, opening fire on his father. The son was killed, and the father was taken to the hospital.

TRAIN ON SOUTHERN WRECKED AT DANVILLE

Danville, Va., January 29.—South-bound train No. 29, on the Southern Railway, was wrecked here to-night at 11:30 o'clock when pulling out of the station. It was carrying a switch and took to the ties taking three mail cars with it. The train was proceeding quite slowly, and few of the passengers in the rear cars knew what had happened until it was too late.

The conductor, the accident, which occurred just in front of the Danville and Western depot, will delay the train at least four hours, and at 1:30 A. M. all available hands are rearing the train.

ENGLAND LOOKING FOR SHARE IN TRADE

Head of Cambrian Combination
Comes to Virginia to View
Coal Situation.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
Norfolk, Va., January 29.—American competition in the coal trade has been seen and recognized, is responsible for the visit to the United States of D. A. Thomas, head of the Cambrian Combination, the largest coal operator in England, and exporting concern in England. Looming big in the future, its tenacious fingers ready to clutch at possibilities the opening of the Panama Canal will bring, Yankee aggressiveness in its inroads on coal trade England has employed for generations.

This glimpse into the future, poignant with potential trade battles for possession of South American markets, was given to-night by Mr. Thomas, who spent the day in Norfolk with railroad officials looking at terminal and shipping facilities from Norfolk. Mr. Thomas will go to-morrow morning to West Virginia to inspect coal properties.

"I cannot say what we shall do. I am looking the coal situation over in this country, and can say nothing definite until I have done this," he said.

"In case your corporation decides to operate American fields, will you give your personal attention to the task of putting the new business on its feet?" was the reply. "I should come to America and take personal charge. When I left the House of Commons after twenty years' service I hesitated about going actively into business."

"I consider the English coal of a better quality than that mined in America. Tramp ships that use the English coal prefer it and it is hard to get them to change to the American product."

In England steamboat lines are not operated by railroads or coal companies. I personally own stock in steamboats, but the Cambrian combination owns no ships.

will be chosen again when the Democrats caucus to fill their places a little later on.

Finely-bred, splendidly-trained and keen-nosed, foxhounds in the Wilson inaugural parade. Dr. Lester Jones, of Culpeper, is gathering together the finest pack of foxhounds in the world and will place them ahead of the mounted band which will escort the hunt club riders in their section of the parade.

This unique feature of an inaugural parade is receiving no end of attention in Virginia. Dr. Jones to-day informed the inaugural committee that the foxhounds he will select will be of such fine breeding that they will "stay put" and will not "break" and scatter all over the line of march. A competent master of hounds will be the grand marshal of the canine army.

While there has been a little feeling shown here because most of the best places in the House have gone to men from the South, Mr. Sinnott, besides doorkeeper, W. H. Dunbar, of Georgia, postmaster, South Trimble, of Kentucky, clerk of the House, and Jerry South, a cousin of South Trimble, chief clerk, it is most likely that all of these
